

Traffic Problems In 'Good Old Days'

This picture of Santa Cruz in the yesteryears was shown by Richard Bailey to his fellow Santa Cruz city planning commissioners at their meeting last Wednesday night to illustrate that they had traffic problems even back "in the good old days." Note the hot rod (?)

Chevrolet (?) parked on the wrong side of the street at the "busy" Soquel avenue-Water street junction. The little girls are presumably doing what little girls still do, while the man on the buckboard (background) is going downtown for a little excitement. As for the bell, of the variety that used to line El Camino Real . . . even The Sentinel greybeards haven't come up with that answer.
