Longtime racer a popular winner; Nybo tops women's field

SANTA CRUZ — For years, Dave Reid has held his own against some of the world's best triathletes. He's always been a top finisher, but he has also stepped aside to allow his Team Kinesys teammates, like Olympian Victor Plata, to get the glory.

On Sunday, at the 22nd Sentinel Triathlon, 29-year-old Reid finally stopped being a bridesmaid and played the role of the bride. He won the race in 1 hour, 58 minutes, 19 seconds, edging second-place finisher Tim Sheepen by 34 seconds.

After some confusion, Holly Nybo of Portola Valley was named the women's winner. Her time of 2:11.40 was 4:13 faster than defending champion Katrin Tobin of Santa Cruz.

Reid was pleased.

"This is the first race I've actually won," said Reid, who often shares in the victories of his teammates. "I finally whittled my way up to the top."

Over the past year or so, Reid has allowed teammates to draft behind him in the bike and swim. He has also been the runner up in the Sentinel more times than he would like to count.

"I've been around long enough. I saw Pat Williams win and Victor Plata win. I said, 'I want to win that someday,'" said Reid, who lived in Santa Cruz until moving to Berkeley this summer, though he still works locally for the U.S. Geological Survey a few days a week.

Reid thought he'd finally met his goal last year, only to see it snatched away. He broke the winner's tape, then found out mid-celebration that 38-year-old Albert Boyce, who started in a later heat, had beaten his time. Reid had to settle for third.

This year, Reid held on for the win.

Of 1,400 entrants, Reid arrived first on Cowell Beach after the 1.5-kilometer swim around the Municipal Wharf. Excelling on the 40k bike ride to Davenport and back, he stretched his lead to three minutes over Sheeper. Then he hoofed it as hard as he could in the 10k run along West Cliff Drive.

Reid knew Sheeper would be closing fast. Two weeks earlier, Sheeper, of Menlo Park, overtook him on the longer 13.1-mile run during the Big Kahuna Triathlon.

But he covered Sentinel's 6.2-mile run just fast enough to hold on.

"I still had a 1:45 lead at the turnaround, and I knew I was fading," Reid said. "(Sheeper) probably could have run two times the distance at that speed, and I would have collapsed in another 100 yards."

Third-place finisher Dave Liotta did collapse upon finishing, right at Reid's feet. Liotta, a longtime local racer who finished in 2:00.56, then began to bow to the winner.

"Week after week he lays the railroad tracks for Victor Plata, and he enjoys it," Liotta said. "But I see him finally get the win, and it's just great. I think if I won today, I might not be as happy."

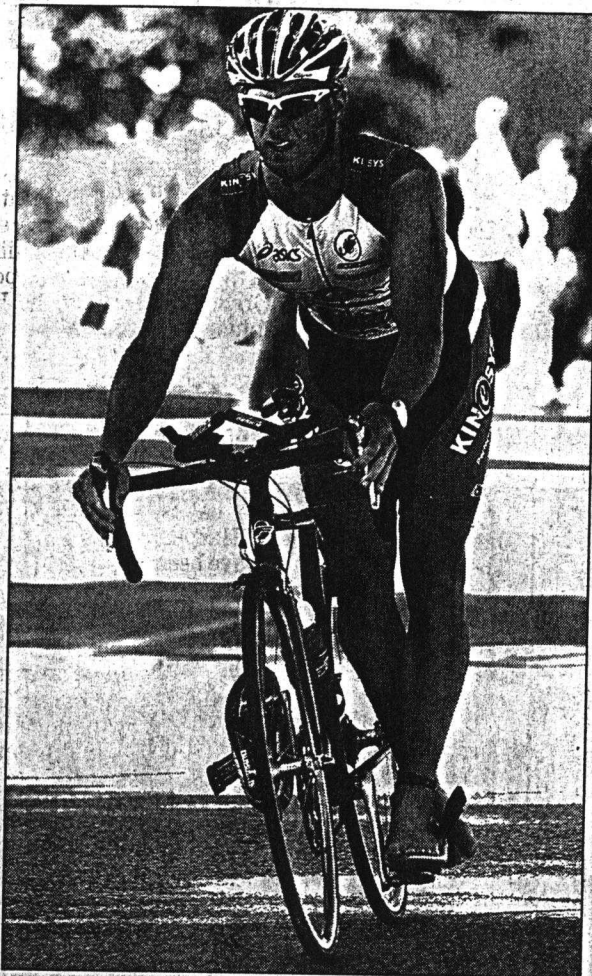

All three placers in the men's race ran in the elite division, which was introduced to the Sentinel for the first and last time this year. The category caused more headaches than it was worth for race organizers and entrants. For example, while the winner of the women's elite race, Kristina Hensch of San Francisco, finished 20 minutes ahead of her closest pursuer, Santa Cruz's Shanna Guzman, her 2:21.07 time was actually the fifth fastest women's time overall.

Nybo, named an Inside Triathlon All American last season for her age group, had planned to race in the elite division so she could start with the first wave of swimmers. Instead, she opted to join her 40-44 age group along with Tobin, who said she was unaware an elite division even existed. Megumi Masuda of San Francisco ran in the age 30-34 category and took third (2:17.39) for the second-straight year.

"What I think caused some of the challenges this year is we had some people register as elite racers, then they decided to run in their age group," said Flo Queen-Stover, assistant race director.

Queen-Stover said that confusion, and other concerns, already has race organizers planning to drop the elite division next year.

Nybo, a former professional triathlete and Sentinel winner, led her age group from the start. She would have felt the heat of Tobin's pursuit had the former national team cyclist not gotten a flat tire near Wilder Ranch. Tobin estimated it took five or six minutes to fix the tire, which would have put her at the finish line at roughly the same time as Nybo.

The tire was just one of many things that went wrong for Tobin this weekend, including being stung by a bee near her right eye and getting left out of the original list of placers. None of it seemed to dampen her spirit, however. If anything, it made her relish her hard-fought place a little more.

"I'm so excited," Tobin said. "I just feel like I raced great."
