

Plotting along

Bill Lovejoy/Sentinel

Ryan Keating and Rob Mullen hoist a table into the back of a truck Saturday to help relocate the Homeless Garden. Below, Bob Adams totes a flat of flowers.

Homeless Garden finds new digs

Sentinel staff report

SANTA CRUZ — It was moving day Saturday for the Homeless Garden Project.

The volunteer garden moved from Lighthouse and Pelton streets to the end of Shaffer Road, off of Delaware Avenue near Long Marine Lab.

About 10 volunteers helped move flats of tiny flowers, remnants of the office, tables and other items. Volunteers were greeted with muddy conditions, but kept up a good attitude. One volunteer, former garden neighbor Joan Chesley, said she helped to show that not all the neighbors are happy to see the garden move.

"I'm showing support by helping them," she said.

The new garden is bigger, and there are no neighbors to complain about its presence.

The city is selling the former site to build housing.

