

Stacked boats and a brooding sky

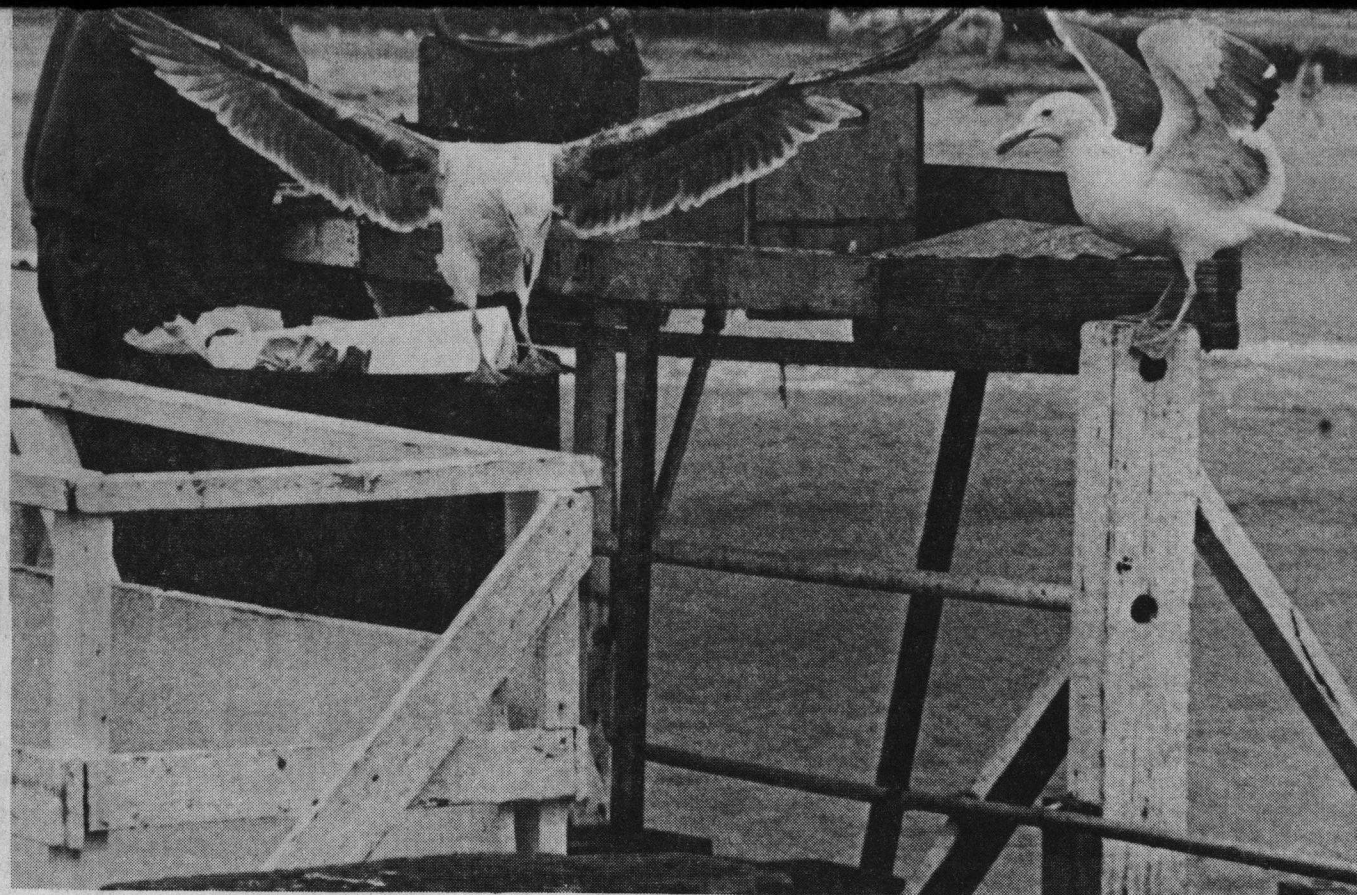

Baiting the hook.

~~~~~
Photos by John Muir
~~~~~

Stocking up in the bait shop.

A couple of kibitzers hanging around for a handout.

The wharf at Capitola

The Capitola wharf has been a part of the landscape for more years than a lot of people can remember. It is a focal point for one of man's pleasanter pursuits — fishing. It is a place where one can escape and rid one's head of the cobwebs.

There is a lot of talk about the wharf these days. Some people welcome the news it may be developed into a more commercialized tourist attraction. Others like it the way it is.

Whatever happens, it is a great place for pictures.

There's no better place for a walk than the wharf on a brisk, windy day.