City Attorney

Edward J. Diener, superintendent of the A. K. Salz tannery, shows occupational therapists how California saddle leather is made. The trio of technicians recently made a tour of the century-old tannery in order to pick up scrap leather for use in their occupational therapy programs, a project in which Salz participates by donating the leather. The technicians are Ann Cheney, Palo Alto Rehabilitation center, left, and Marilyn Mengshol and Delphine Peraldo, Stanford convalescent home.
