

Thousands Thrilled When Aviator Climbs From Plane to Plane

Thousands of Oakland people are still talking today about the daring feat performed in midair by Lieutenant Ormer Locklear, noted aviator. He thrilled thousands yesterday by climbing from one airplane to another while both were traveling 1000 feet high at the rate of more than ninety miles an hour.

Lieutenant Shirley Short and Milton Elliott operated the machines.

Not content with changing from one plane to another in the air, Locklear gave additional proof of his daring by walking on top of the wings of one of the planes.

Mrs. Sarah Kirsling of San Leandro fainted when she watched Locklear attempting to reach a rope ladder in his climbs from one machine to another.

The aviators were brought to Oakland by R. C. Durant, vice president of the Chevrolet Motor Company of California. Locklear praised the work of his pilots, saying that it was their skill that made it possible for him to perform the stunts successfully.
