Displaced Bird Baby Likes New Home

This is an infant displaced robin which will not remember the feel of the traditional feather nest when he grows up. He fell from the nest and caught the attention of Bobby Stobaugh, 14, and his brothers, Allen, 11, and David, 7, of 405 Leibbrandt avenue, who put the babe in a cardboard box and backed away. Soon the mother bird, seeming to accept the act as an indication that she would not be harmed, transferred her feeding operations to the box, even though the boys stood curiously by. Note the canned food imprints on the box bottom.
