

A look into the Valley's past

Boulder Creek

Activity Center

The Southern Pacific Railroad station in Boulder Creek was the site of much of the town's activity, both by passengers and local logging operations. Built in 1885, it stood at the north-east end of town, where the fire house is now located. Boulder Creek was the last station on the San Lorenzo Valley River line and was used until the company ceased its operations in the 1930's. Photo courtesy of Anne Locatelli.