UCSC Selects Architects For Cowell College

The architectural firm of Wurster, Bernardi and Emmons has been named executive architect for the first residential college at the University of California at Santa Cruz, President Clark Kerr and Chancellor Dean McHenry announced yesterday.

The first college will be financed by federal, state and private funds. A federal loan will finance the residential portion; state funds will be used for academic and dining facilities; the Cowell foundation gift of $800,000 will provide amenities not available from federal or state sources.

The Cowell grant is contingent upon federal-state provision of around $2.4 million out of a total of $3.2 million.

Proposition IA on the November 6 ballot contains funds for the state's share of the construction money for this first college and all funds required for other buildings as UCSC.

Actual preparation of plans as well as construction of the building itself is subject to funding.

To be named Cowell college after the pioneer Santa Cruz family on whose former holdings the university campus will be developed, the building will house approximately 400 students and will provide classroom space as well as living quarters for the dean and faculty fellows.

An internationally-known firm, Wurster, Bernardi and Emmons of San Francisco maintains a highly diversified practice which includes public, commercial and industrial work as well as over 500 individually-designed homes, many of which are located in the Santa Cruz area.

The Pasatiempo clubhouse and the original Marian Hollins home now owned by J. L. DeBenedetti Jr., and many other local residences are Wurster designs.
