'Flooring' About Ready, But No Dances Scheduled

A Granite Construction company workman cleans up the new "floor" under the Riverside avenue bridge as work nears an end at the span. The flood-controllers are sorry, but the concrete will not be slicked up with wax for rock 'n' roll or square dancing since the river soon will be turned back into the channel. The flooring will help hold the bridge together during high water periods when the pinched river banks at the bridge will cause water to tear at the structure's underpinning.
