

Workshop set on UCSC development plan

A public workshop to discuss alternative sites for UCSC's proposed research and development center will be Thursday at 7:30 p.m. at the Nelson Center.

The workshop will open with a presentation by the administration on site requirements and the selection process. The environmental assessment staff director will then discuss the work in progress and the preliminary findings.

Seven sites are under consideration, four on the upper and three on the lower campus. Questions and comments at the workshop will be limited to the issue of site selection.

Future workshops will be held on growth management and housing, traffic and public services, water use and waste disposal and impacts on natural systems.
