

New Freeway Between Soquel Bridge And Capitola Overpass

Next fall Soquel and Capitola commuters to Santa Cruz will be whizzing down this new four-lane freeway after driving up the Porter street incline. Porter street can be identified by the truck. In the background is the Capitola overpass. This central-arch bridge is the one over Soquel creek. It is 323 feet long and is one of eight major structures between Morrissey boulevard and Rob Roy. It is now 19 miles from Morrissey boulevard to the Watsonville city limits via the new section of highway. Arch M. Walsh, resident engineer for the state division of highways, says the distance will be cut two miles when the freeway opens in September.

Freeway Culvert In Arana Gulch

This 90,000-cubic-yard fill is in Arana gulch along the new freeway. It is 500 yards long and the earth was taken from cuts. Arana gulch creek runs through the 10-foot culvert. Its size is emphasized by the auto and men at the top. The erosion on the sides of the fill will be curbed by special plants. The east side of the culvert has a steel rail refuse catcher to prevent floods from wedging logs inside.
