Swenson Tells Of Future Plans For Junior College

By Norman Indahl

Spring is the target date for a bond election to finance the construction of Cabrillo junior college.

Dr. Robert Swenson, college president and district superintendent, unfolded the building program of the new JC district at a meeting of the county planning commission this week.

Plans call for an architectural firm to be selected at the board of trustees meeting August 5. A citizens' committee will be formed in September, with a final selection of a site due to be completed in the fall, the president explained.

Dr. Swenson reported there is general agreement among the trustees and college officials that the site will be somewhere in mid-county. He explained that after checking extensively with persons throughout the county there has not been one dissenting opinion against a mid-county location.

Seven architectural firms are being screened by the trustees and JC officials. Yesterday they looked at schools planned by the Kump-Masten and Hurd architectural firm of San Francisco. Buildings viewed were San Jose, Cupertino and Sunnyvale high schools.

The firm developed plans for the Foothill college in Mountain View.

Abraam Krushkhov, director of planning for the Wilsey and Ham consulting firm of Millbrae, explained the establishment of a JC will have quite an effect on the master land use plan being developed for the county.

Dr. Swenson reported the college is expected to have a full capacity of approximately 2000 students. The trustees and college officials plan to work closely with the commission in picking a site.

The bureau of planning for the state department of education requires a minimum of 100 acres.

Several suggestions have been made for locating in mid-county, but they have not been checked out.

Since the JC district, established only this month, does not have any tax monies on which to operate, Dr. Swenson yesterday submitted a request to the board of supervisors for a loan of $100,000 to the district until taxes are collected and deposited in the county treasurer's office.

The loan is requested for the rest of this year.
